Dvar Torah by Rabbi Yaacov Marmor

Parshas Metzora tells us about a new form of tzaraas that was not mentioned in parshas Tazria; the phenomenon of tzaraas of the home. If a person found a blemish on the walls of his home he would call the Kohen who would ascertain if it was indeed tzaraas.

Before the kohen arrived, the owner would remove all of his belongings from the house, lest they become contaminated if the kohen declared the blemish tzaraas. The kohen would then quarantine the house for a seven day period and if the affliction spread he would declare it tzaraas.

They would then remove the afflicted stones from the walls of the house and replace them with new stones. If the affliction returned the kohen would declare it a malignant tzaraas and the house would be destroyed.

Rashi tells us that this tzaraas was different from the tzaraas that infected the clothing and the skin. The purpose of this tzaraas was actually something positive!

When the Emorites fled the land of Israel they hid their treasures in the walls of their homes so that the Jews would never find them. As a chessed to the Jewish People, Hashem would place tzaraas on the walls of their homes so that when they would break the walls they would find the treasure.

Now, most people did not realize this when they discovered the tzaraas, and not every case of tzaraas yielded a hidden treasure. Therefore, when a person discovered tzaraas on their walls for the first time they were probably quite distressed.

Most people would think to themselves: "Why did this happen to me? I can't believe I have to leave my home for a week! This is absolutely terrible! How am I going to pay for the demolition and construction of a new wall!?"

But in reality, for many of these individuals, Hashem was sending them a hidden brocha that they would only discover after going through the hardship. Even though they would have to undergo a painful and inconvenient process, in the end, they would be rewarded with a hidden treasure that they would never have discovered without destroying their home.

Although we no longer have tzaraas of the home, Hashem still puts us through the same process. He gives us hardships in order to discover the hidden potential that lies within us. Life has its fair share of challenges, but the purpose of these challenges is to make us into greater people.

May we have the strength to overcome our hardships, and may we know with confidence that the purpose of each challenge is to discover the hidden treasure that lie within us.

Have an amazing Shabbos!
